

COME ON OVER | Moved chairs and Mike Regalini nearly lost at new Crown Heights restaurant, as, amid the pandemic, but Yaw shows an optimism. Mike says of a weary's Place Two insurance.

rebound

On June 3, Black-Owned Brooklyn, an Instagram account with just shy of 10,000 followers for Kings County restaurant Crowned County and Green A Inn, spotlighted Ismael and Mike. Their restaurant orders skyrocketed.

"After that, we got so many people back," Ismael said. "We were just so happy, we were just overwhelmed."

When New York City ordered Plaza Two on June 22, Ismael and Mike, reportedly, kicked from the Park of the restaurant to accommodate 20 people on the sidewalk and in the street.

They brought blankets to add privacy and to separate customers, adding canopies for atmosphere. They shared four front-of-house workers and servers to staff the kitchen.

Now, on a typical night, the couple notes that at a distance with every patron they are encouraging discussions from the Black Lives Matter movement to plan to add five more seats.

"It's definitely about uplifting each other," Ismael said.

"The whole concept of a restaurant is that it's not just a business. We have to give back to the community. We definitely want to reach our neighbors."

Gov slams crowd control.

Gov. Cuomo put the blame on Mayor de Blasio Wednesday for not enforcing social distancing and mask-wearing as he announced that indoor dining in the Big Apple won't happen "until the facts change."

Cuomo, speaking during a press briefing in Manhattan, did not mention the mayor by name but said "I am disappointed" when it comes to stopping the coronavirus spread "in dining" and "local government" is not enforcing regulations.

"Look at pictures, look at any street in Manhattan, go to the East Village, go to the West Side, go to Brooklyn, go to Queens, go to The Bronx," Cuomo said of non-socially-distant and maskless gatherings.

"Government is supposed to be enforcing compliance, and that is not happening to a sufficient extent."

He added, "If you have common compliance dropping and you don't have local governments enforcing, then you're going to see the virus go up."

In response to the mayor, New York state will create its own enforcement capacity to supplement local government efforts, Cuomo said.

Bethesda/Edgman

Swim soon, at a distance

Three outdoor public pools will open as early as July 24, but with coronavirus-related restrictions, including wearing masks when out in the water and keeping six feet apart so matter where you are, Mayor de Blasio announced Wednesday.

The facilities are the Mulabie pool in The Bronx, Liberty in Queens and Wagner in Manhattan.

Twelve other pools will open on Aug. 1: Crotona and Mallon in the Bronx; Sunset, Butry Head and E-Pool in Brooklyn; Hamilton Park, Jackie Robinson, and Marcus Garvey in Manhattan; Aurora and Futuro in Queens; and Lyons and Yonkersville on Staten Island.

Julia March

US buys up antiviral

The United States has bought almost the entire global supply of remdesivir, the antiviral drug that can speed the recovery of patients infected with the coronavirus.

Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar announced earlier this week an agreement to secure large quantities of the medication from Gilead Sciences until September, allowing US hospitals to buy it. HHS said it secured more than 500,000 treatment courses of the drug.

Steven Seidenbach

It's time NYC
The Next
Move Is Yours

One57 | 157 West 57th Street, 45C
SUN | 4 BR, 4 BA | Web# 4120814

Douglas Elliman

It's time NYC
The Next
Move Is Yours

DouglasElliman

CONNECT NOW

The Next
Move
Is Yours

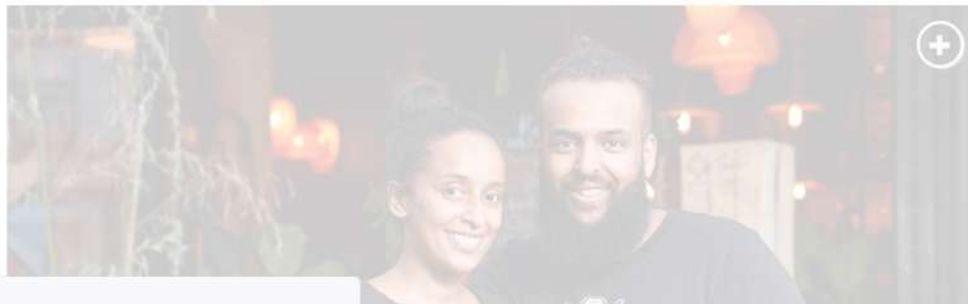

Douglas
Elliman

LIVING YES, WE'RE OPEN

Brooklyn eatery, shuttered by COVID-19 just 8 days after opening, bounces back

By Hana R. Alberts

July 2, 2020 | 12:01am | Updated

TRENDING NOW ON NYPOST.COM

The end of an ESPN era

